As more people shelter-in place to help reduce the spread of coronavirus (COVID-19), demand for delivery services has risen, and opportunities for work are escalating.

Amazon announced this week plans for its US operations to hire another 100,000 workers and to raise pay for their workers. Delivery food services Postmates, Grubhub, Uber Eats, and DoorDash are seeing higher demand for their services. A banner atop DoorDash's site reads: "We appreciate your patience as we are experiencing long-wait times due to COVID-19."

With restaurant workers finding themselves with fewer hours and lost wages, DoorDash stated yesterday that it will be creating a, "priority access program," to help workers at their restaurant partners sign up as delivery workers, "enabling them to meet their financial needs until their jobs return to normal."

Demand for workers in transportation and storage appears to be holding strong amid the pandemic. Food delivery and package delivery driver jobs rose in the second week of March and are likely to rise further as people shift more of their shopping online. ZipRecruiter data shows, job postings in the US related to food delivery have risen 78% from 2017 and for transportation and storage 36%.

Amazon has established a relief fund to provide its Flex drivers with two weeks of pay if they are quarantined or diagnosed with COVID-19. Uber has expanded sick pay to drivers who are diagnosed or quarantined. Similar policies have been announced by DoorDash. Postmates, DoorDash, and UberEats, who are offering, "contactless," delivery to help mitigate the spread of coronavirus.

Walmart, the world's largest brick-and-mortar retailer, straining under pressure to get goods in the hands of its customers during the coronavirus crisis, is looking to grow its workforce.

The retail giant said it will hire 150,000 new employees through the end of May to work in stores, clubs, and distribution and fulfillment centers. The jobs will be temporary, but many will convert to permanent roles according to a news release Thursday. Walmart also plans to reward currently hourly workers with more than $365 million in cash bonuses, "for their hard work and dedication," during the national health crisis, the release said.

Walmart says it has reached out to industry groups representing restaurants and hospitality to, "facilitate temporary roles that can be a bridge for their employees during this difficult time." The hiring process will be expedited for cashiers and stockers and the normally two-week application cycle, "will be reduced to a 24-hour process." Jobs will be posted at www.walmartcareers.com.

Grocery stores like Albertsons, Ralph's, Food 4 Less, Vons and Stater Bro's are hiring employees to stock shelves, clean stores and work behind the register.

Grocery store giant Trader Joe's is also looking to hire seasonal employees, with a special message on their website: To those who have found their hours limited or jobs placed on hold, we invite you to join our Crew until your employer is able to welcome you back.

Pizza Hut is also hiring for several positions across its Indianapolis-area locations, including delivery drivers. To search for openings and apply, visit jobs.pizzahut.com or text, "quality huts," to 242424 and follow the link.

Domino's said staffing is critical at times like this and they are hiring for store positions including pizza makers, delivery experts, customer service reps, managers and assistant managers. The world's largest pizza chain is hiring 10,000 people during the global coronavirus crisis. Those who are interested in applying for a position should visit jobs.dominos.com.
